overall muscle function. The goal for the warm up should be to reach the point of beginning to perspire. The purpose of a cool-down is to rid the body of lactic acid and other waste products and to gradually reduce your body's core temperature and heart rate. After your warm-up, begin your dynamic stretching.

Keep the whole body warm. Patients should wear multiple layers of clothing, a hat, warm gloves, and warm socks. Commercially available hand-warmers can help, especially for patients who live in cold climates. Learn to avoid or manage stress. Good communication, attention to the patient's needs, and regular follow-up for reassurance are paramount.
