About 16 species typically associated with Rhus and Toxicodendron, or with host alternation between these genera and Cyperaceae, although the life cycles of most species are unclear. Remaudière & Muñoz Viveros (1993) expanded the concept of the genus to include Glabromyzus (four North American spp.; reviewed by Cook 1984c) and Juncomyzus (five east Asian spp.).

Tilia is a genus of about 30 species of trees, or bushes, native throughout most of the temperate Northern Hemisphere. In the British Isles they are commonly called lime trees, or lime bushes, although they are not closely related to the tree that produces the lime fruit. Other names include linden for the European species, and basswood for North American species.

Willows all have abundant watery bark sap, which is heavily charged with salicylic acid, soft, usually pliant, tough wood, slender branches, and large, fibrous, often stoloniferous roots. The roots are remarkable for their toughness, size, and tenacity to live, and roots readily sprout from aerial parts of the plant.
